

STEAM DRIVEN SHIPS WILL PASS

GENERAL FISHER SAYS THE MOTOR ENGINE WILL RULE SEAS.

Best Story He Heard in America Came From Woodrow Wilson Greatest Marvel He Saw Pennsylvania Station Unless It Was Penn Drink of Water.

Lord Fisher of Kildarestone, Admiral of the Fleet, who came here to attend the wedding of his son Cecil to Miss Jane Morgan, daughter of Randall Morgan of Philadelphia, sailed for home yesterday on the White Star liner Baltic, in which he arrived. His son adopted the name of Vassour to oblige a director of the gunmakers, Armstrong, Whitworth & Co., and thereby win an inheritance of about $2,000,000. The Admiral of the Fleet is bluff and breezy. He saw the reporters in his stateroom just before the liner sailed and reminded them that he had said he would give them a talk if they came around to see him off. Naturally they asked him what he thought of America in the six days he has spent here. He answered cheerfully:

"I think I can sum up this country in one word, 'hustle.' I have hardly had any time for anything except to be entertained and so my observations have been limited."

A lady entered the stateroom at this point and remarked to the Admiral: "Philadelphia is a slow place."

The lady then went out and the Admiral said: "There is a lady you should interview. She has opinions."

On the subject of oil fuel for battleships the Admiral said: "Oil fuel? I am not in the oil business. You cannot tell what people would say if I boasted the oil business."

About the motor engine the Admiral was more explicit. "The coming thing in navigation," he said, "is the motor engine. There is a 9,000-ton merchant ship that is being equipped with oil engines. The nation that takes hold of this engine first will sweep the board commercially. The merchant marine will take it up first, naturally. See the great cargo spaces on a ship. It is a great thing in labor. Instead of a crew of 150 men you have one of only seventy for a big merchant ship. Steam as a propulsive power must go."

"How about the aeroplane as a naval force?"

"The aeroplane will do away with small fighting vessels of the navy and will be valuable in matters of reconnaissance and despatch work and that sort of thing."

That is all the Admiral would say on themes connected with his trade. He landed at the new Pennsylvania station, and declared that it was "the most wonderful thing I ever have seen. It is as high as St. Peter's at Rome and built as smartly. It is marvellous the way they have of erecting buildings here. I put a nickel—that what you call it?—in the slot at the station at a telephone booth and the door opened and disappeared. When I came out the door reappeared and closed. It is wonderful. I put a penny in a slot and I got a sanitary pasteboard cup and a drink of pure water."

A reporter said he had never noticed the telephone booth and the pasteboard cup devices, which inspired the Admiral to say:

"Go and see that telephone booth. You reporters interview strangers on many things, but you don't know what is in your own country. Still, I must say that the American reporters here have about the English, who are not on to their jobs. Here the Admiral smiled, conscious that he was talking Americanese."

The beauty of the American women, the Admiral said, charmed him. He also liked the American men, particularly Dr. Woodrow Wilson, whom he met in Philadelphia at dinner. The Admiral wanted to know if Dr. Wilson was going to be President of the United States, remarking: "In America, you know the result of an election a year ahead, so you ought to be able to tell me. I think Dr. Wilson is a very fine fellow. He told me at that dinner the best story I ever heard of."

"Oh, I had better not tell you what it was. It might be copyrighted."

The Admiral denied that he had ever given an interview in London to an American correspondent, mentioning the name of the correspondent and said laughingly: "He probably was talking with John, one of the spirits that have him under control."

Fred B. Dalzell, who was a fellow voyager with the Admiral on his trip from Liverpool last week, was at the pier to see him off. The Admiral said that Mr. Dalzell had told him the best story he had heard about ship, so that for sea and shore America held the record for yarns. Mr. Dalzell boarded the big Dalzelline and accompanied the Baltic down the bay, displaying a brand new Union Jack.

Segregation of Defective Pupils.
The Jersey City Board of Education is planning to establish classes for defective children. The first class will be formed in a public school centrally located in the near future, and others will be organized as the need arises. Superintendent of Schools Henry Snyder said yesterday that it will be to the advantage of all the children to remove the defectives from ordinary classes because the latter receive so much individual attention that the others cannot receive enough.

The Weather.
Nov. 27. The low pressure over the ocean yesterday caused high northern winds in the middle Atlantic and New England States. Fair weather prevailed in the middle Atlantic States. Some fog in the northern parts of the States. Northern New England was foggy. Western New England was foggy. Light rain fell in the Central West and Southern States. It was fair in the South and West. Fog and drizzle in the middle Atlantic States. In the West and Northwest it was a drizzle.

In the West, the day was fair, with a drizzle in the evening. In the middle Atlantic States, a drizzle, with a few showers of rain. In the South, a drizzle, with a few showers of rain. In the West, a drizzle, with a few showers of rain. In the middle Atlantic States, a drizzle, with a few showers of rain. In the South, a drizzle, with a few showers of rain.
